Mouse chromosome 2, which was originally classified as a pericentromeric inversion chromosome, was recently mapped with specific probes for 35 loci in order to clarify their chromosomal location. Most of these loci were mapped to a central pericentromeric part, i.e., 18 loci at regions 6q14-23 and 5q14-33. A few were mapped to two different regions of the chromosome; thus, loci Bcl-x and Muc-2 were mapped to 2p11, while Muc-1 to 2p12.5. Finally, five new loci, namely D1zq3, Mlh2, Bcl-2, Mlh1, and Cd69, were mapped to 2q13.2-15.2. The expression patterns of most of these loci were examined with the Northern blot technique, and D1zq3, Bcl-2, Mlh1, and Cd69 showed cell-type specific expression. Our results indicate that cell-type specific loci are present throughout chromosome 2 and that they are mostly located in central pericentromeric regions.Q: Render updated expression from http get on click I have a react component which shows a list of records returned by an API call.
