"" Category:Automotive software/Artist Biography: Ryuichi Sakamoto Over three decades Ryuichi Sakamoto has made a mark as a pioneering composer, producer, arranger and singer, not to mention the master of Japanese avant-jazz, fusion and electronica. From the early 70s to the mid-80s, Sakamoto was an integral part of Japan's composers' conference, J-POP. He co-wrote the theme music to the anime film version of Akira, and his scores include Kagemusha, The Last Starfighter and Nausicaa of the Valley of the Wind, among many others. He produced and arranged for a number of albums, most notably Elvis' Love Me Tender and Hear My Heart Sing, and a variety of soundtracks, including the Luc Besson film The Fifth Element. Ryuichi Sakamoto was born in Osaka on December 9, 1949, to classical music enthusiasts. As a child he listened to Western classical and jazz music, but after high school he turned away from the classical side of things and became an avid listener of rock'n'roll, ska, reggae and soul music, and was particularly fond of John Lennon and the Beatles. Sakamoto began writing music at the age of 16, composing scores for Japanese television. He was a student at the Tokyo Music School, where he wrote a number of musical sketches for television and film, and also published his first collection of experimental songs, Manga Kyou no Shinshou ("A Short Story About Manga"). He also started teaching at the school, and spent a summer in New York. A music conference organised by the school led to the formation of the band Malpas, which Sakamoto led and performed in alongside the likes of composer Joe Zawinul and guitarist Steve Gadd, who had attended a music conference he had held in Tokyo with arranger Marty Paich. The band rehearsed regularly, but Sakamoto later said that they "never formed into a proper band." Sakamoto made his musical theatre debut in Tokyo in 1968, playing the part of a pianist in the Japanese premier of the Gene Kelly film Singin' 2d92ce491b
