With the increasingly popular use of computers by businesses and consumers, there is a corresponding increase in need for computer security. Computer security systems typically operate by preventing unauthorized users from accessing computer software or computer hardware. In a conventional computer security system, a user installs an anti-virus application to protect against security threats. However, these conventional computer security systems are passive in nature. Once installed, the anti-virus application only protects the computer from known security threats. The software does not prevent the user from unknowingly installing security threats. Thus, there is a need for more active computer security systems that work to actively prevent the user from installing security threats. Thus, there is a need for a computer security system that actively prevents a user from installing security threats. The present invention is directed to overcoming, or at least reducing the effects of, one or more of the problems set forth above.

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. – The 2013-14 Arkansas wrestling season got started earlier than most Arkansas fans might have expected – or expected any season to start. The Razorbacks, ranked No. 19 in the nation according to the NCAA Wrestling Coaches Poll, opened up practice on Sept. 8 and are ranked 18th in the nation in the most recent coaches' poll. Those rankings come with Arkansas having won three matches at the Razorback Invitational last weekend at Stuttgart's Memorial Coliseum. In the championship match, Anthony Amos defeated Logan Cox and Jake Sanchez defeated Jaylon Harrison in first-round action at 174 pounds, while Josh Carter took a seven-point decision over Tommy Grundy at 184 pounds. “We’
