In the 5' region of the MUTYH gene a newly described polymorphism G>A at the position -107 has been described \[\@B42]\]. Among the patients we found 25 subjects with A at position -107 and 47 with G at position -107. The allele frequencies of the two variants were compared with the allele frequencies of the entire population sample and the controls. No differences were found. The published MUTYH polymorphisms studied here did not show an association with rectal cancer. A discrepancy with the previously published data for the MUTYH-G>A polymorphism \[\@B22], \[\@B42]\] was found: the frequency of the GG genotype was higher in the rectal cancer patients in our study. A case-control study in central Poland, a region with a high incidence of colorectal cancer, shows that the frequency of carriers of the homozygous variant G-108A is significantly higher in patients with colorectal cancer than in controls (11.3% versus 4.2%, $P = 0.02$) \[\@B43\]. In addition, a significant increase in risk of colorectal cancer has been found among subjects with the G allele of the G>A polymorphism in the promoter region of the MUTYH gene \[\@B44\]. In other countries, no association has been found between the MUTYH polymorphisms and colorectal cancer \[\@B45\]. Also in this study we did not find a difference in the distribution of M
