hsDefragSaver is a professional hard drive defragmentation utility. It runs in the background and defragments your hard drive automatically while you are away. It supports many hard drive types: SATA, IDE, PATA. It supports multi-monitor (multiple screensaver), multi-drive (multi-hard drive), and multi-storage (external storage). In addition, it is fully customizable. You can choose the number of hours, frequency, the path of defragmentation, number of tests, and hard-drive type in the Options.

Starting the first time you defragment, hsDefragSaver runs a complete analysis of the drive. It calculates the amount of fragmentation and the type of fragmentation on your hard-drive. Then it displays the results and automatically begins defragmenting your hard-drive in the background. You can choose to have hsDefragSaver notify you when it starts, or to let hsDefragSaver run silently. It also has a command line mode. You can use that command line mode to execute it manually. You can stop hsDefragSaver manually or automatically. If it finds itself in the background, it will continue to defragment your hard drive until it completes the analysis. This molding method uses a soft material having a large swelling ratio, such as an amorphous polymer material. In this molding method, the molding surface of the molding surface of the mold is heated to a molding temperature, a soft material is poured into the mold, and then the mold is cooled. This causes the soft material to be firmly fixed on the molding surface of the mold. In this molding method, however, only the soft material is heated, so the structure of the molding surface of the mold is restricted to a simple structure. In addition, this method is poor in versatility because the mold has a complicated structure and therefore the mold is complicated. Furthermore, in this molding method, it is difficult to mold the soft material on the molding surface of the mold having a complicated structure. As another method for molding a soft material on a molding surface of a mold, the method as disclosed in JP-A-10-139042 is generally known. This molding method uses a non-swelling soft material having a low swelling ratio, such as a crystalline polymer material.
