All of this comes with trusted security and SSL encryption. Requirements:  DirectX for 2-way voice Limitations:  60-minute working trial Makers of Convene, a low cost web-based whiteboard and Internet video conferencing, have announced a major release that is aimed at making multi-person meetings easier. Convene was designed for ease of use, and the new release (version 4.5) improves usability and performance. Convene's two-way speech, video, and chat features are now free to use, up to 60 minutes a day. "We designed Convene as a fast and easy way to make, record and discuss meetings," said Tim Reinhart, chief executive of Convene, a Palo Alto, CA company. "We believe there are so many great ways to use Convene and our user feedback has been incredible." New Features Version 4.5 offers the following new features:  Free up to 60 minutes a day of multi-person conferencing, up to 10 meetings a day at no charge.  Conference Chat: Join Convene by typing in the URL to your conference room, which allows you to start and join a video conferencing session instantly. Chat with your guests with available desktop chat, join in on the session with your audio, or record your meeting.  Meeting Readiness: Record your meeting, share your audio feed with your guests, and control and check the status of the room during your meeting.  Free Desktop Chat: Chat with your guests around your desktop sharing window, and view the status of your shared applications in a read-only window. (Requires Microsoft Internet Explorer 8 or later.)  Alternate Attendees: Now you can choose to have some attendees join in via audio and some via desktop chat, and others come in with separate functionality for desktop chat only.  Best of Both Worlds: Mix and match the desktop and audio options
